Hand and Foot

HIGHEST TOTAL WINS

Aim. Partners build books of seven cards of one rank, play through the hand, then the foot, and one of you goes out.

Players: 4 or 6, in partnerships (two or three teams) · Played to: 4 or 5 rounds

HOW A HAND SCORES

- Book points: each clean book, each dirty book and each red three at the values below, plus the bonus to the side that goes out.
- Card points: add the cards in your melds, then subtract the cards still in your hands and feet.
- Round total = book points + card points. Carry the running total across, and note the point difference between the teams.

WHO WINS

After the last round, the higher running total wins.

TABLES OFTEN SETTLE THESE IN THEIR HOUSE RULES

- How many clean and dirty books it takes to go out (one of each and two of each are both common).
- Whether a red three still in hand counts against you (many tables take 100 off).
- A fifth round, and its opening meld minimum.

These are common values, not the only right ones. Write the values your table plays in the house-rules box on the front.

From one night to a whole season

You have a pad that scores a full game of Hand and Foot and a two-night standings sample that works out who won. When the same table plays most weeks, the full pack keeps the whole season for you.

> WHAT THE FULL PACK ADDS
> The Game-Night Score Sheets & Season Standings prints ten score pads for seven games: Hand and Foot in 4-round, 5-round and three-team editions, plus six more card and domino games. Its workbook turns every night's final scores into a leaderboard for each game and an overall season table, handles the games where the low score wins, and adds a round scorer. The workbook works in Excel, Google Sheets and LibreOffice.

Every name and figure on the filled-in pad and in the sample log is invented: the Penhallow family is fictional. Scoring values are common values; every table plays some of them differently, so write yours in the rules box.
